Horny & Suicidal: A Queer Love Story with Anxiety	This story tracks the perils and promises of gay male life while navigating (very) anxious thoughts. Wrestling mental illness and relationships proved to be horrible and funny all at once (so I made some comedy, and a podcast about it). Paranoia in non-monogamy, jokes, and the hilarity of therapy fill the pages.

I am a gay woman and I was born without my left hand, and I love how these beautiful intersections of my identify play out on my kitchen!

Not One Spirit But Two: How I Had To Get Lost In Order To Find Myself	Life is difficult when you're a young Indigenous man growing up in and out of the Child Welfare system, surrounded by drugs and alcohol, struggling with the pain of being orphaned at a young age, all the while coming into your sexuality and gender identity. Through the power of ceremony, education and community, I was able to uncover and learn about what it means to be a two spirit person, and all of the beauty and history behind that spiritual identity. I'd like to share what "two spirit" means to me, and show you what it can look like in contemporary society through the lens of my life, my experiences, and my journey.
From Combats to Stilettos and Beyond	I'm a trans woman now in my mid thirties who has spent close to 15 years serving her country, coming out as trans while serving, eventually getting out and striving to create my own path. I spent two years working as a professional dominatrix, utilizing skills I learned in the kink community. Currently I am studying massage therapy and am also a member of the poly community.
